Back fence gossip is a pastime which is pretty difficult to eradicate. Someone recently suggested that since it is here to stay its nature should be changed.

Instead of talking about the evil in the neighborhood, we could do well to talk about the things for which we are thankful. We might which our neighbors have done. We need to talk about the kindnesses which have been shown, instead of about the slights which

Guy Hunter Speaks at Carrier Mills Woman's Club

Guy Hunter, who is with the Egyptian Health department, spoke Monday at the Carrier Mills Federated Woman's club, which met at 7:30 p. m. at the Masonic temple. Mrs. Loren Dallas, president, presided, and in the absence of the health chairman, Mrs. Calvin Storms, introduced the speaker.

He spoke of the different depart ments in which the health unit is divided and the work of each; some of the aims and desires of each in helping communities in their health problems. At the conclusion of his talk Mr. Hunter spent several minutes answering questions which were of particular interest to the members.

During the business meeting Mrs. Harry Fife assigned to each member a portion of some street to solocit during the "Mother's March on Polio." Mrs. Owen Hitchcock was elected to membership in the

Mrs. Dallas gave a report on the club's Christmas project, which was to help make Christmas merry for a deserving young girl. She reported that it was a very suc cessful effort and thanked all the members for entering so heartily into the project.

The pledge to the flag was led by Mrs. George Whitney. Mrs. Parish Miller gave the devotional. the theme of which was "The New Year," closing with a poem challenging to the present time for the coming year.

The club secretary, Mrs. Cressie Holmes, also gave the report of the treasurer, who was absent. Hostesses for the evening were:

Mrs. Marie Fife Harris, Mrs. Guy Hunter, Mrs. Van McDonald, Mrs Parish Miller and Mrs. Harry Me ler. They served cookies and coffee during the social hour.

Deaths Were Numerous

So with that capital, Victor Karcher started his coffin shop His was a craft in great demand too, for in those days death was abroad in the land. "People died of chills and fever every day," as the saying went.

When death came to a family someone, probably a neighbor, took measure of the deceased with a cornstalk then carried it to Victor Karcher. He made the coffin to size. Money was scarce and he often took his pay in farm produce or even in livestock. They provided meat for his young family

When only 40 years old his health broke and he died in 1898. His wife, Mary, and the older son, Victor Karcher Jr., carried on the trade until 1913 when Mary Karcher and her sons, Frank and Victor, were persuaded to move "their business, which in addition to supplying coffins (commercially made now) included burial service No Cemetery

So it was in 1913 that the Karcher Funeral Home, oldest in the city of Cairo, oldest in the state of Illinois, and believed to be the oldest in the nation, was established. With money borrow ed from Mrs. Anastasia Gayer, resident of Cairo who had connections in Shawneetown, the mother and son purchased the funeral establishment that had been carried on on a limited scale by Mrs. M. E. Feith. Frank Karcher, since the death of his brother, Victor. five years ago, carried on the firm until only a few weeks ago.

Vienna was whistled for only eight fouls, four in each half and Galatia never had the opportunity to shoot a bonus free throw.

Brady of Vienna was the game's top scorer with 28.

Davis paced Galatia's well balanced attack with 20 points and four teammates, Odle, Hill, Jones and Boyett, also scored in double Shawneetown, after 16 consecutive losses, cracked the victory column with a 72-68 decision at the expense of Enfield.

And Shawneetown was on the verge of losing again, but rallied in the last minute of play to pull out the decision.

Enfield was in front by four points and had the ball with a minute to go. Shawneetown stole the ball and in the down court drive was fouled. An Enfield play er slammed the ball to the floor and a technical was called, setting up a 1 and 1, plus another shot, at the free throw line. Two of the three shots were made. Shawneetown then had the ball to throw in and scored a fielder on the play, to tie the score. Catching fire with victory in sight the Indians went on for more points and a
